Gendering Historiography
Beyond National Canons

Campus Verlag
Frankfurt/New York
Contents

Multiple Histories? Changing Perspectives on Modern Historiography
Angelika Epple and Angelika Schaser .......................................................... 7

1. Historiography in flux

Gendering Historiography in the Global Age: A U.S. Perspective
Bonnie G. Smith ................................................................. 27

Fear of Plurality: Historical Culture and Historiographical Canonization in Western Europe
Maria Grever ................................................................. 45

2. Gendering the National Canons of Historiography

Biography, Gender and the Deconstruction of a National Canon
Irma Sulkunen ................................................................. 65

Gendering the Polish Historiography of the late Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries
Claudia Kraft ................................................................. 78

3. Dividing Lines between the Traditional Canon and Excluded Histories

Gendering Tradition and Rewriting Church History
Ulrike Gleixner ............................................................... 105
Gossip or History? Popular Turkish Historians and the Writing of Ottoman Women’s History
Ruth Barzilai-Lumbroso ......................................................... 117

“There is so much, and it will all be history”: Feminist Activists as Historians, the Case of British Suffrage Historiography, 1908–2007
Krista Cowman ................................................................. 141

Opening up Narrow Boundaries: Memory Culture, Historiography and Excluded Histories from a Gendered Perspective
Sylvia Paletschek ............................................................... 163

4. The Gender-coded Profession of the Historian and Alternative Professional Careers

History as Argument – Alexandra Gripenberg, Ellen Key and the Notion of True Feminism
Tiina Kinnunen ................................................................. 181

Tapping New Resources – Setting Old Boundaries: Female and Male Historians under National Socialism
Heike Anke Berger .......................................................... 208

Gendering Historiography? Problems and Suggestions
Martina Kessel ................................................................. 225

Contributors ................................................................. 234

Index ............................................................................. 238